Description

This year, I have been working with my club calf steer, Dr. Pepper. He was born a year and a half ago on my familys ranch, and has been here ever since. He is a pretty calm animal, and is easy to work with, but whenever he sees me with a halter in my hands, he starts running. I always like to keep my steer on a strict feeding schedule, which has me feeding him at about the same time every day. I usually give him bucket of grain in the morning and afternoon, with free choice grass hay at night, which is about the same time I like to let him out of his pen to enjoy the cool night air and roam the pasture around our barn. Even though my experience with my animal has been fun, it has come with some challanges. I've had to work with my steer for long hours, even on days when he just wants to stay inside and relax, which never sounded too bad to me either. Despite all the tough times however, I have enjoyed the time I have spent with Dr, Pepper and cherished all the valuable information I have gathered, which I know will make me a much better showman for the next time I decide to work with an animal.
